

Consider Having Another Child.

(A child called Charity, that is).

Whether you have a little or a lot, a Will is important. It allows you to choose what will happen to what you have. Even if you do not have children, adding a Child called Charity as a beneficiary to your estate redirects money to charities of your choice that would otherwise go to taxes. Here's an example:

Leaving your $500K* estate to your children or include an additional 'child' when leaving your $500K* estate to your children

The math is not wrong.

Call and ask about the simplicity and impact of using the Child called Charity to create a lasting legacy. Our Partners at Advisors with Purpose can help you create your own personal, confidential estate plan. It's free, there is no obligation and no one will sell you anything.
